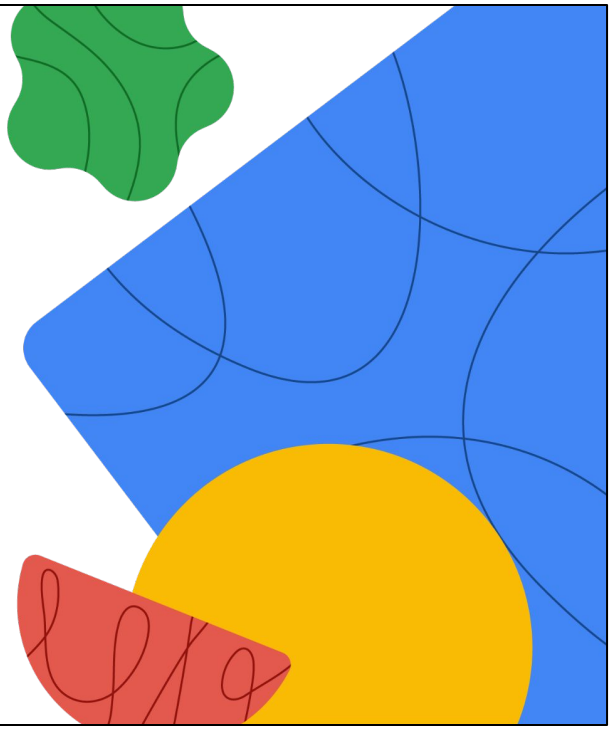
Summary

Introduction to Looker



This concludes the "Introduction to Looker" course. You've now gained a solid understanding of this powerful platform and its role in modern data analytics.

We began by exploring the core purpose and key features of Looker.

You learned

how to navigate its interface, understand its

access control mechanisms, and recognize how Looker Studio integrates directly into the Looker platform.

Next, we delved into LookML and the semantic layer.

You learned why Looker developed LookML, defined its role in creating a consistent

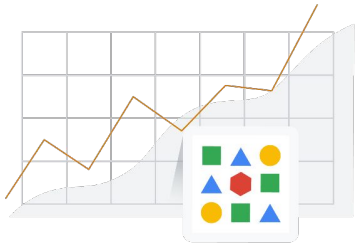
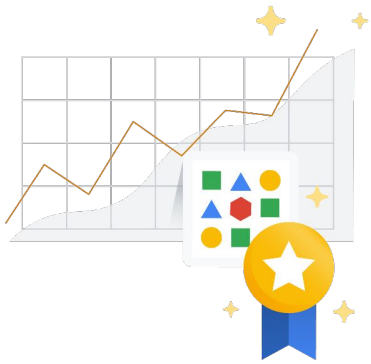
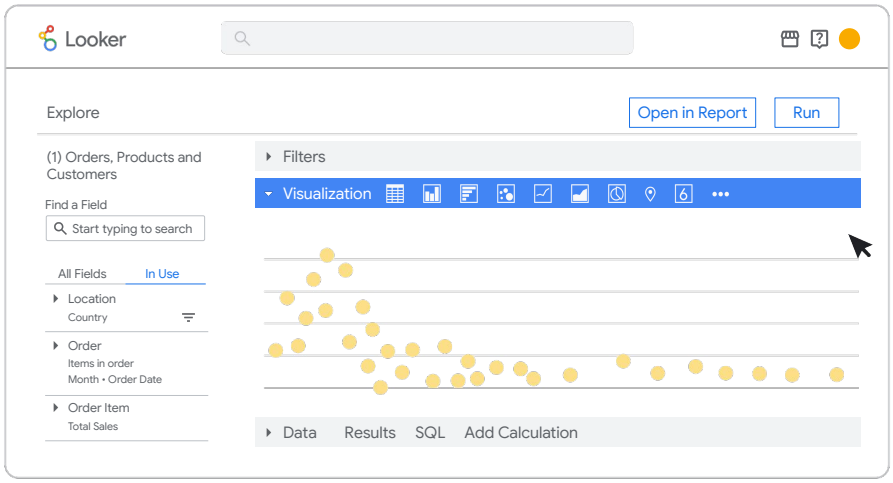
data model,



and understood the benefits



it provides for data consistency and governance.



Our journey then took us to governed BI & analytics. We explained its benefits and process within Looker, including how to interact with Explores

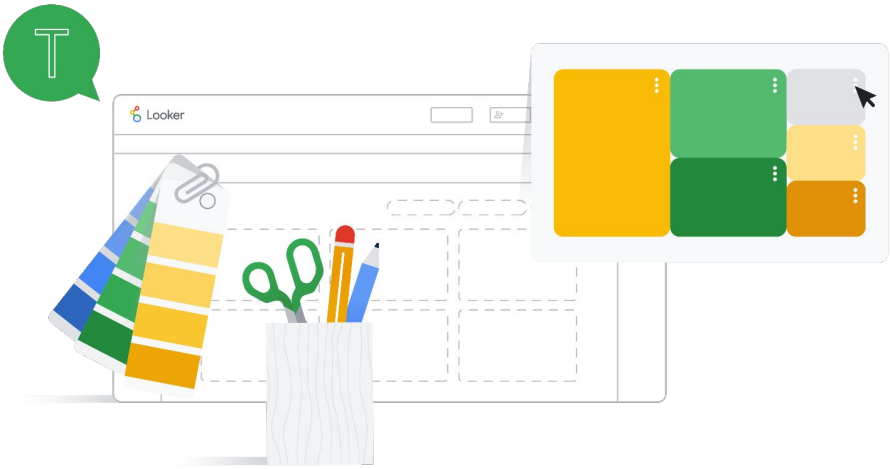
Open in Report
Run
Filters
Visualization
Data
Results
SQL
Add Calculation
Looker

and create



user-defined dashboards for tailored insights.

Following that, we explored Gemini in Looker.

You discovered its AI-powered assistants for visualizations, and the LookML editor.

We also covered conversational analytics and the role of agents in assisting with analytics tasks.

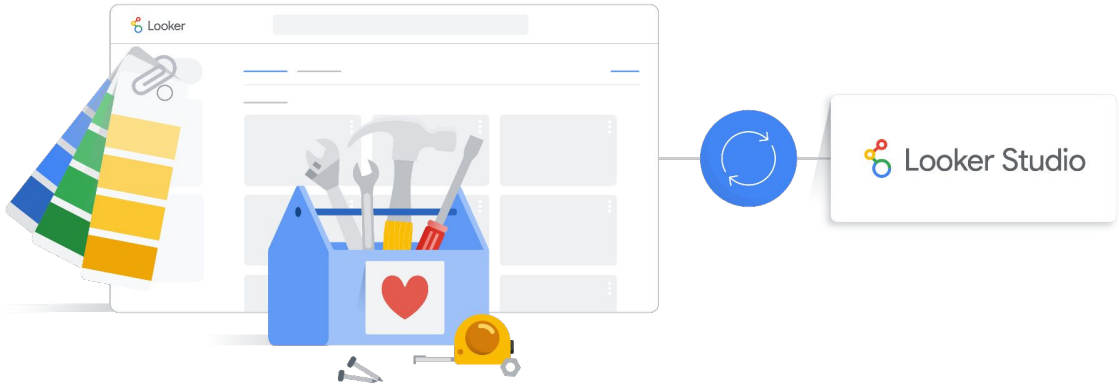
We then focused on self-service dashboarding and reporting. You learned its concept and how

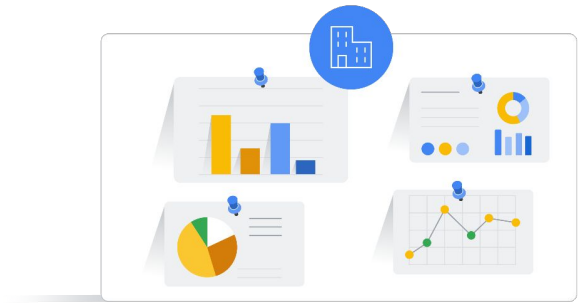


"Studio in Looker"

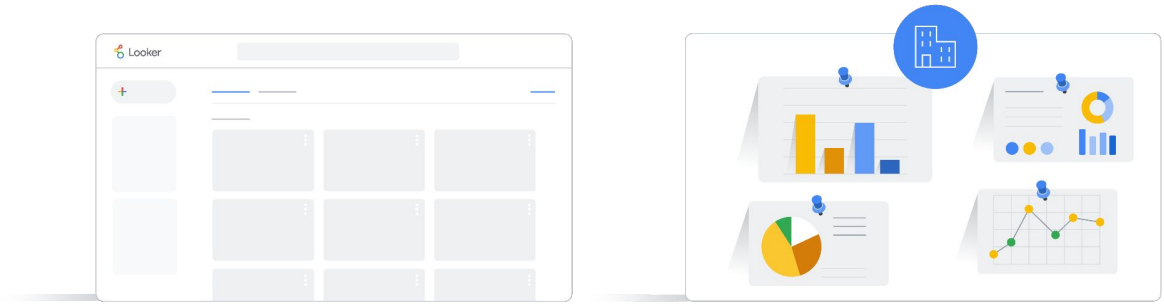
Looker Studio

facilitates this approach

as an integrated feature within the Looker platform, including creating Looker Reports.



Finally, we covered external analytics and embedding.



You explained

their use in Looker, defining external analytics for sharing insights and describing the process and benefits of embedding Looker content into other applications and workflows.
